Europe Ambition 2030

Following the adoption of the “2030 Agenda for sustainable development” by the Un General Assembly in September 2015, in the recent Communication “Next steps for a sustainable European future” the European Commission wrote that “The EU is fully committed to be a frontrunner in implementing the 2030 Agenda and the SDGs, together with its Member States, in line with the principle of subsidiarity”.

According to many, this approach does not seem ambitious enough for an institution that is facing its worse crisis since its foundation, as President Juncker said in his 2016 “State of the Union”. This lack of ambition is difficult to understand especially considering that the European Union has been one of the drivers of the negotiations towards the Agenda 2030 and the Paris Agreement, and that all over the world governments, businesses and civil society organisations are thinking about how to make the Agenda 2030 “the” driver for a more prosperous, equitable and sustainable future.

The celebrations of the Sixtieth Anniversary of the Rome Treaties are a great opportunity to launch a process to build a new vision for Europe and a metamorphosis of the European Union based on the values and objectives defined by the 2030 Agenda. The implementation of the SDGs should become a key leverage for achieving the aims (“promote peace, its values and the wellbeing of its peoples”) of the Union as laid down in article 3 of the Treaty.

The conference will be the opportunity to discuss how European State and Non-State actors should change to become “champions” of the SDGs and demonstrate, in the current times of anxiety, uncertainty and temptations to self-withdrawal, that the European political, financial, economic and cultural leaderships can get together to make the EU “the” world champion of sustainable development and, in this way, fight against the risks of economic disintegration, global protectionism and social conflicts.

Of course, adopting the SDGs as an overall political framework could require a redesign of EU governance and policies, as well as of the relations with its Neighbours. But the next two years represent a historical opportunity to make these changes, also taking into account the agenda that is already in place, which includes, among other things, the revision of the EU 2020 Strategy, the reform of the EU budget, the elections for the European Parliament and the nomination of a new Commission.
